per, Mr. J. E. Wharton, who was editor of the Wheeling Timesfrom 1835 to 1855, argues that President Taylor was in reality murdered by poison because of his opposition to the extension of slavery: Mr. Wharton says: "The cares of office never sat heavy on Gen. Taylor," and there are many poisons that would not be detected by the best physicians except through a many poisons that would-not be detected by the lost physicians except through a post mortem examination, and probably they had no suspicions that he was poisoned, and their minds did not rever to it as the cause of his death. I felt more fully confirmed in my opinion after a conversation with Mr. Clay in 1851. We were walking to the steambost, when he stopped me and said: I see by your paper you do not like the Fugitive Slave law. I replied. I do not. I consider it unconstitutional and very oppressive. '80° do 11' he replied, 'but what could I do? This Union must be preserved. To do that has been the most important work of my life, While drafting the Omnibus bill Mr. Mason, of Virginia, called, handed me that bill, asked me to examine it and he would call in the morning. He did so, and I handed him the bill, telling him it was unconstitutional. Said he, 'I know it, but we are determined to be separated from the North, If you pass that they must rebel. If you don't, we shall, and I can show you he if you con't. determined to be separated from the North. If you pass that they must robel. If you don't, we shall, and I can show you a list of nearly all the prominent men of the South who are pledged to it." I believed the North would submit to it and adopted it. 'There were those, doubtless, who found out that Mr. Fillmore thought General Taylor ought to sign the bill, or something of that sort, and he became President."

A Good Word for Colored Men.

we have heard it said, by not a few proprictors, that their negro tenants are habitually honest and prompt in payment of bitually honest and prompt in payment of their dues, while the reverse was true of white renters of land. This is greatly to the credit of the colored man, and rather to the discredit of the white tenant. We are told that much progress has been made in some of the neighboring counties by colored farmers established upon large plantations, owned by white men of humane dispositions, who assist the tenants with advice, and, when needed, money. These colored people form a colony, work lard, improve their dwellings, plant fruit trees, and make comfortable sums of cash annually. Merchants here praise their housesty, and, do not lear to trust them.
